

Motor Vehicle Records: Not Just for Drivers

Motor Vehicle Record checks are often considered to be position-specific searches; that is, most employers only order them for employees that drive company vehicles on a daily basis. Looking into an applicant's driving history, however, can help an employer establish a clearer picture of an individual before offering them a position. Take these additional perspectives into consideration when compiling your next background screening package:

Why order a Motor Vehicle Record?

We pride ourselves on being a "service first" company. Our dedicated support team consists of FCRA certified, industry knowledgeable Account Managers – an amazing resource that we often encourage our clients to take advantage of. With our extended support hours and myriad of contact methods, you can be sure that we're available when you need us.

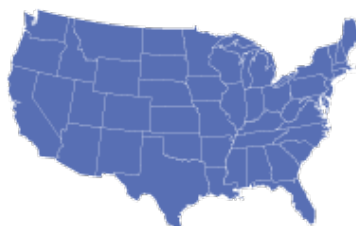

You also have access to convenient online tools, available 24/7, that allow you to place new orders, update your account preferences, view invoices, and even send a status request with a single click.

State Specifics

Motor Vehicle Records will only provide information available for the state in which it was obtained and not all states report records the same way. Some states may only show violations from the last 3 years, whereas some states report all violations (for employment purposes, only those records from the last 7 years should be considered).

Annual Background Checks

Motor Vehicle Records will only provide information available for the state in which it was obtained and not all states report records the same way. Some states may only show violations from the last 3 years, whereas some states report all violations (for employment purposes, only those records from the last 7 years should be considered).